

Aero Sekur appoints head of UK sales

A former Royal Air Force Aerospace Engineer with a strong commercial background has been appointed as a Regional Sales Manager for Aero Sekur. Tom Cramman will support development of the company's aerospace and defence sector customer base in the UK.

The appointment supports development of Aero Sekur's Anglo-Italian profile. The company, whose core competency is the design and development of advanced engineered structures using flexible materials, has extensive manufacturing and R&D facilities in Italy, and representation worldwide.

Commenting on the expansion of the company's sales network Aero Sekur CEO Mark Butler said:

"Tom is ideally placed to develop partnership relationships with key accounts. He combines broad commercial experience with technical and management skills gained in the RAF. Additionally, his work for a respected global leader in elastomeric, thermoplastic and composite materials is particularly relevant for Aero Sekur's market."

From 1989 to Nov 2000, Tom Cramman led a multi-skilled team of technical support specialists to meet the RAF's challenging performance standards and objectives. Field sales experience was gained in the customer management software sector and, from 2003, Cramman was employed by Greene Tweed as Business Manager responsible for domestic and global business development at Rolls Royce plc.

Aero Sekur's product portfolio includes parachutes, flotation systems, fuel tanks, ground defence, space, R&D, repair & overhaul and advanced inflatable structures.
